Dutch and Water: Seeking their own level By Judy Boogman This is a great contemporary look at the Dutch (The Netherlands) and their "partnership" with water. They have managed to control and live with this amazing force of nature and help others in the world do the same. You can really get a feel for the landscape and the "light" that is so well known in Dutch art that is seen in all the great museums of the world. All over the world, people learn in school that the Netherlands is a country that lies below sea-level. Dikes, polders, windmills and wooden shoes are well-known icons of this unusual nation, while its sturdy dams and storm surge barriers also enjoy world fame. But how does it all work? How can a country exist under such circumstances and even be prosperous? One would expect the Dutch to panic about climate change but they don't seem to be; how come? This book will tell you all about it, both in words and photos, striking a balance between developments in the past, the present and the future, steering clear from both generalizations and too much technological detail. Whether you are an expat, tourist, or far-away individual who has taken an interest in the country, this book will offer fascinating insights into how a society can function at sea level.
